

Warren Bennis – “Leaders keep their eyes on the horizon, not just on the bottom line.”

Zora Neale Hurston – “No matter how far a person can go the horizon is still way beyond you.”

Ella Mallart – “The wideness of the horizon has to be inside us, cannot be anywhere but inside us, otherwise what we speak about is geographic distances.”

Theodore Roosevelt – “Keep your eyes on the stars, and your feet on the ground.”

Eric Holder – “You keep your eyes on the prize, you try to do what’s right, and eventually, you’ll reach your goal.”

Denis Waitley – “You must look within for value, but must look beyond for perspective.”

Finally, from Charles Fillmore in Keep a True Lent – “Man can never discern more than a part of the circle in which he moves, although his powers and capacities are susceptible of infinite expansion. He discovers a faculty in himself, and cultivates it until it opens out into a universe of correlated faculties. The farther he goes into mind, the wider its horizon, until he is forced to acknowledge that he is not the personal, limited thing he appears, but the focus of an infinite idea.”
